Summer ???

Check out what's new at the Refresh!

As we continue to ponder where our summer is, some of us may have been spending extra time indoors rather than partaking in our usual outdoor activities during this prolonged rainy spring! Whether it is spending time with family and friends watching the Stanley Cup playoffs, going to our favourite blockbuster movie, or just in our homes curled up with a hot cup of coffee and a good book, one thing that many of us have in common is our home.

Whether you are living away from home for the first time and in a tiny one-bedroom suite, renting an apartment, or saving for your first home, all of these homes have something else in common too as they are located on traditional Coast Salish land.

Each year on June 21, not only do we celebrate the long-awaited official summer solstice and the day of maximum daylight, we also recognize June 21 as National Indigenous Peoples Day. If you are not sure where your current home rests, here is a resource that you may find helpful and also includes an interactive map!

Drop by and take a look at all of the new arrivals!
